What Is the Microscope Slide Case Used For?

Slides left loose in drawers get scratched, chipped and mixed up, and a single dropped tray can undo years of collecting. A dedicated case keeps a class set together: one case per topic — plant tissues, animal tissues, microorganisms — makes it quick to hand out the right slides for each practical and to check that all of them come back. It is equally useful for a student's own practical record of temporary and permanent mounts.

Store only fully dry slides with the mounting medium set, labels facing the same way, and keep the case in a cool, dry cupboard away from direct sunlight, which can fade stains. Before filling it, check your slide thickness against the listed 1.0 mm; thicker slides should be confirmed with us first. A well-organised case is the simplest way to protect a microscope slides set for school labs in India.

What to Specify When Ordering

- The thickness of the slides you will store (the case is listed for 0.04 inch / 1.0 mm).
- Number of cases, for example one per topic or per class set.
- Any blank or prepared slides to quote on the same order.
