What Is the Skipping Rope Used For?

Skipping builds stamina, rhythm and quick footwork in a short space of time, which is why many PE teachers use it as a warm-up or as one station in a circuit. Pupils start with a single bounce per turn of the rope, then progress to alternate-foot steps, skipping on the spot while counting, and timed challenges where each child tries to beat their own score.

Because the rope has no handles, pupils simply wrap the ends around their hands to shorten it until the rope just clears their feet – a quick way to fit one rope length to children of different heights. For long-rope games, tie two or more ropes together, let two children turn, and have the rest of the group run in and jump in turn.

What to Specify When Ordering

- The total number of ropes you need, for example one per pupil in your largest PE class.
- How many packs that means – ask us to confirm the number of ropes in each pack.
- Whether you want extra ropes for tying together in long-rope group games.
- Any colour preference, noting that the pack is listed with assorted colours.
