What Is a Large White Medical Coat Used For?

The large white medical coat is working clothing for staff in health structures. It goes over personal clothes, or over a surgical tunic and trousers, to keep them clean during ward rounds, outpatient consultations, dispensing and sample handling in the hospital laboratory. The chest pocket holds pens and a pen torch, while the two patch pockets take a notebook, spare gloves or a stethoscope.

Choose the large size for staff who need room across the shoulders when the coat is worn over other layers, and check the sleeve length on the wearer before placing a bulk order. After a shift or any visible soiling, disinfect the coat in chlorine solution, wash and iron it. Issuing at least two coats per person lets one be worn while the other is in the laundry.
