What Are Medium Gynaecological Gloves Used For?

Long-cuff gynaecological gloves are used in labour rooms, antenatal clinics and gynaecology units for procedures in which the forearm as well as the hand needs a sterile covering. The listed aim is to protect both patient and staff from cross-contamination. The medium size with its narrower palm suits clinicians with slimmer hands, who would find a large glove loose at the fingertips and prone to slipping.

A labour ward usually needs more than one size, so many buyers stock this medium pair alongside the large version and plan the split according to their team. Keep the sterile packs dry and unopened until use, and discard each pair after one procedure. The gloves are natural latex, so any staff member or patient with a latex sensitivity will need a latex-free alternative.

What to Specify When Ordering

- Number of medium (7.5-8) pairs, enough for a fresh sterile pair every procedure
- How many large pairs you need for staff with bigger hands
- Confirmation that natural latex suits your users
