What Is the Blue Child ID Bracelet Used For?

In feeding programmes and paediatric wards, a two-colour system lets staff sort children quickly without reading every tag: blue for one enrolment group or follow-up schedule and red for another, according to the facility's own protocol. When a paper insert is used, fill it in before sliding it into the band so the text sits flat behind the clear plastic.

For field surveys, teams often pre-write the household or survey number on a batch of blue bands before setting out, then add the child's name on site. Organisations shipping supplies to overseas programmes can include these bands in the same consignment as scales and measuring boards.
