Typical Use

The simplest routine is to check the main kit at the end of each forensic unit and order a refill before the next one begins. When the refill arrives, lay it out next to what remains in the original kit and work through the instructions you use for the activity, so every group starts the lesson with a complete set rather than discovering a gap halfway through the practical.

Departments that run the simulated-blood activity with several sections of the same grade usually keep one main kit and plan refills around the number of groups they expect to teach in the year. As a school science kit supplier in India, we can quote the refill together with other consumables for the unit, such as gloves and eye protection, so one order covers the whole practical. If you are unsure whether your existing kit needs a refill or a replacement, tell us what is left and we will advise.
