What Is a Wooden Slide Box Used For?

A hundred-slide box is a convenient size for a teacher’s demonstration collection, a student’s project slides, or several small prepared sets kept together. The hinged lid stays attached to the box and the clasp holds it shut, so the collection can be carried between the preparation room and the microscope bench without the lid coming loose.

Keep the box closed in a dry cupboard, as wood reacts to damp and heat, and a dry store protects both the box and the slides. Write an index of slide numbers on the inside of the lid so that each slide goes back to the same slot after a practical.

Supplier

Jain Scientific Equipments Private Limited, trading as ScienceLab from Ambala, Haryana, supplies this wooden slide box to schools, colleges, universities, dealers and importers in India and international markets. It can be packed together with prepared slide sets and blank slides in a single order. The ScienceLab profile has more about the company.
