Typical Use

A laboratory technician's day involves tightening boss heads and clamps, replacing fuses and leads, checking electrical apparatus with a multimeter and fixing loose fittings on benches. Keeping those tools together in one zipped canvas bag means they travel to the physics, chemistry and biology rooms as a set, rather than being borrowed and lost. The same bag is useful for field trips, carrying thermometers, sample bags, tape measures and notebooks to a pond or garden study, and for vocational and technical courses where each group needs its own tool set.

The water resistant canvas shrugs off splashes and light rain, but it is not designed to hold liquids, so keep chemicals in their own sealed containers. Avoid overfilling so the heavy-duty zip closes without strain, brush out dust and metal filings regularly, and let the bag air-dry if it gets wet. As part of a new school laboratory setup, one or two tool bags per department make routine upkeep far quicker.
