What Is the Microscope Slide Dispenser Used For?

Clean slides matter in microscopy: a thumbprint on the glass shows up as a smudge at high power, and skin grease can stop a smear or stain from spreading evenly. The dispenser keeps a stock of blank slides covered and releases them one at a time, so each student lifts a slide by its edges instead of reaching into an open box. It is most useful in practical classes where students make many wet mounts, blood smears or stained preparations in one session.

Load the magazine with 76 x 26 mm slides, close the cover and turn either knurled knob; the rubber rollers push the slide out far enough to be picked up by its edges. With a knob on both sides, the dispenser can be used from either side of a shared bench. Wipe the ABS body with a damp cloth and keep the cover closed between classes so dust does not settle on the remaining slides.

What to Specify When Ordering

- The number of dispensers, for example one per bench or preparation area
- Whether blank 76 x 26 mm slides should be quoted to fill the magazines
- Any cover slips or slide storage boxes needed for the same classes
