Typical Use

Larger departments often assign one column of deep trays to each subject — physics, chemistry and biology — so a technician can prepare the next day's practicals for all three on a single trolley. Deep trays accept items that do not lie flat: stacked beakers, measuring cylinders in a rack, dynamics trolleys, lamps or boxed electrical kits. Because the trolley is treble width, check corridor corners, lift doors and prep-room doorways before choosing where it will live.

Keep the heaviest trays near the bottom, push the trolley from the long side rather than pulling it, and set the brakes on its larger castors as soon as it reaches the bench. Wiping trays after each use and returning them to the same runner position helps staff find equipment quickly.
