Typical Use

Two dozen shallow trays suit stores where items are small, numerous and need to be found quickly. A school can give each class or practical group its own tray of worksheets, rulers and small apparatus; a clinic can sort syringes, swabs, sample labels and test strips by type; a first aid room can keep plasters, eye-wash pods and gloves in clearly separated trays so restocking after an incident is fast. Shallow trays also make it easy to see at a glance when a line is running low.

Label trays on the front edge, keep the lowest positions for anything heavier, and avoid stacking items above tray height so trays slide freely. Surfaces that many people touch benefit from the antibacterial treatment, while your normal cleaning routine continues alongside it.
