What Is the Covid Testing Arrow Left Sign Used For?

The sign marks every point where people walking to a testing booth, pod or sample-collection desk need to turn left. Typical spots are corridor junctions, lobby exits, the ends of queue barriers and car-park walkways leading to a walk-in or drive-through test site. Because the wording and arrow are read at a glance, fewer visitors stop to ask staff for directions, which keeps queues moving and doorways clear.

For a route that people can follow without help, fix the sign just before the turn rather than at the corner itself, at a height where a queue will not hide it. Use it alongside the matching Ahead and Right versions so the whole route speaks the same visual language from the entrance to the test point.

What to Specify When Ordering

- How many left-pointing signs your route needs, counted turn by turn
- Whether you also need the matching Right and Ahead arrow signs for the same route
- Any questions about the sign material or fixing method, so we can answer them in the quotation
- The delivery location in India or abroad
