What Is the Wheeled Partition Used For?

Schools, local authorities, hospitals and medical practices use wheeled partitions to set up private screens and keep people apart during mass testing and vaccination sessions. Because the screen rolls, a single room can switch from an open waiting area to a row of booths in minutes, then be cleared again for its usual purpose once the session ends.

Roll the partition into position and lock all four castor brakes before anyone sits beside it, so it cannot drift if leaned on. Wipe the smooth aluminium and PVC surfaces between users as part of your cleaning routine, and when moving the screen, push it from the frame rather than the panel. Unlocked screens can be parked side by side against a wall when not needed.

What to Specify When Ordering

- The number of partitions needed for the booths you plan to form
- Whether some positions would suit the Freestanding Partition Wall on fixed feet instead
- Any direction signs or testing pods to be quoted at the same time
