What Are Stockinette Gloves Used For?

Stockinette gloves are light fabric gloves for clean, low-risk tasks where the aim is to keep hands comfortable and to keep fingerprints and skin oils off the items being handled. Typical examples include sorting and shelving clean apparatus, handling optical parts or display specimens during a lesson, inventory checks in a lab store and packing finished equipment.

Because the listing limits them to non-hazardous environments, they should not be used for chemicals, hot objects, sharp edges or biological samples; for that work, choose a chemical-resistant, heat-resistant or examination glove instead. The white colour shows dirt quickly, which reminds users when a pair needs washing or replacing. Schools that buy from a lab consumables supplier in India often keep a pack in each lab for routine handling jobs.

What to Specify When Ordering

- Number of packs of 12 required.
- Whether the one-size fit suits all your users, or whether a sized glove should also be quoted.
- Any other gloves or masks to include in the same quotation.
