What Is the Medical Mask Used For?

The Medical Mask is worn during routine work where fine dust or light splashes can reach the face: weighing powdered chemicals, grinding samples, cleaning benches, handling stored specimens or attending to patients in a ward or sick bay. The three layers sit between the wearer and the surrounding air, while the water-proof outer face helps stop droplets soaking through during a session.

For a good seal, hook both ear loops, press the upper edge along the nose and pull the mask down under the chin. Handle it by the loops only, and replace it after one use or sooner if it becomes wet, soiled or torn. A 3-ply mask is not a substitute for a fitted respirator where a risk assessment calls for one, so labs working with toxic fumes should plan separate protection.
