What Is the Microfiber Lens Cloth Used For?

Eyepieces collect skin oil and eyelash marks every lesson, objectives pick up dust, and field binoculars and cameras come back from outings covered in fine grit. A microfiber cloth lifts these deposits instead of smearing them, which is why it is standard kit for lab assistants who look after microscopes, for geography and ecology teachers managing binoculars, and for anyone photographing specimens.

Blow or brush away loose particles first, then wipe gently with light circular strokes from the centre of the lens outwards. For stubborn fingerprints, put a little lens-cleaning fluid on the cloth rather than directly on the glass so it does not seep into the mount. Keep the cloth in a clean pouch between uses and wash it when it looks dirty; a gritty cloth can scratch coated optics. It is a small but worthwhile addition to a microscopy starter kit for school labs.

Supplier

Jain Scientific Equipments Private Limited supplies the Microfiber Lens Cloth under its trading name ScienceLab, from Ambala, Haryana.
